

My partner and I are considering a divorce

Divorce should never be the first choice when marital problems arise.

If you believe that a marital counsellor may be able to help, seek counselling. Should a divorce be inevitable, speak to a mediator. Under South African law, one cannot prohibit a partner from approaching the Court for a divorce. Not participating in the divorce could negatively affect the outcome. That Party would be denied the opportunity of giving inputs to the Decree of Divorce.

Legal grounds for divorce

Either of the Parties need to prove to the court that the marriage has broken down irretrievably. The conditions for this include, inter alia:

- Adultery
- Onstant arguing
- Abuse of any kind by either of the spouses
- Loss of love between the spouses
- A spouse has moved out of the house
- Neglecting to support financially
- Habitual criminality

What will happen to our Children?

Both Parties need to agree on who will be the primary caregiver. In recent years our Courts have shown greater flexibility with regards to shared care (shared custody), where the Children spend a period of time with one spouse and the same period of time with the other (subject to age considerations – a social worker may be appointed to compile a report in this regard).

Should the Parents not be able to agree, the Court – as upper guardian of all minors – will decide on the matter, usually on recommendation by The Office of the Family Advocate. The Court may hold the Parties liable for the cost of a social worker's report obtained in this regard.

Given the stress of the divorce itself, the Children should ideally not be subjected to further distress, Mediation enables the Parents to work out their differences and minimize the impact on their Children.

How will our our property be divided?

If the Parties are unable to arrive at a settlement, the court may decide to liquidate the assets and divide the net returns based on the applicable marital property regime.

Typically there is a loss in the value of the returns as the assets are liquidated.

Mediation however, is not limited by these processes: the goal is to find out-of-the-box solutions and to lose as little as possible in terms of the value of the shared estate. Where needs be, the services of an expert (financial / property / business) can be employed to this effect.

Do I have to pay Spousal Maintenance? The mutual duty between spouses to maintain each other usually ends when the marriage is dissolved – unless certain factors apply which demand otherwise.

If only one of the spouses was the breadwinner, the Court may instruct the other spouses to maintain the standard of living to which the other spouse had become accustomed.

Here the Court will take into consideration factors like:

- Assets obtained from the Divorce
- Ability to re-enter the job market or generate an income
- O Age and health
- Reasons for unemployment if the person was not working for an extended period during the marriage
- O Duration of the marriage

The Court may decide to award Spousal Maintenance for a limited period of time to enable a spouse to re-enter the job market.

Do both Parents have Parental Rights and Responsibilities towards the Minor Children?

In terms of the Children's Act 38 of 2005, Parents have the following rights and responsibilities towards their Children:

To care for their Child, to have regular Contact with their Child and to maintain a meaningful relationship, to act as Guardian of the Child and to contribute in respect of Child Maintenance.
